

MAN IN BLUE SUIT SOUGHT IN KNAPP MURDER MYSTERY

Clue to Identity of Aged Building Owner's Companion
Furnished by Woman.

Entering upon the third day of the Knapp mystery, the slaying of Charles A. Knapp, seventy-one years old, in his tenement saloon at No. 80 Bedford Street, detectives were looking for:

The man in the blue coat or jumper whom Mrs. Florence Chris of No. 56 Harrow Street saw entering the dismantled saloon with Mr. Knapp about 11 o'clock Wednesday.

The 1-2 karat diamond stick pin taken by the murderer when he cut Knapp's tie almost in two. Anybody who heard Knapp telephoning for a glass from another saloon and who may have followed him.

The police have brought one man to Headquarters to look at the pictures in the Rogues' Gallery. His name was not disclosed. Whether he found anything worth while is not known.

Knapp's funeral will be held at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon at No. 14 East 20th Street, Manhattan. Interment will be in Greenwood Cemetery.

The mystery was almost twenty-four hours old before the police learned that Knapp had been seen entering the side door of the saloon and that he was not alone.

Mrs. Florence Chris saw the pair from the window of her apartment at No. 56 Harrow Street enter the building about 11 o'clock Wednesday. She did not pay particular attention to the stranger. All she knows about him is that he was dressed in blue. She isn't sure whether he wore a coat or the blue jumper of a laborer.

Detectives to-day took up a tracing of Mr. Knapp's last day and covered his actual route so far as it has been made known. They began with him in the saloon of Pietro Maffari, at Commerce and Bedford Streets, whence he telephoned to the Myers Plate Glass and Window Company, No. 181 Lafayette Street, to send a man to No. 80 Bedford Street and take away the saloon mirrors the Myers Company had bought at auction the day before. One theory is that he may have been followed from Maffari's.

The story of Mrs. Chris shows that Knapp was accompanied by a man not previously known to him. Knapp carried a package wrapped in brown paper, Mrs. Chris says, and when he went to unlock the door, handed this parcel to the man in blue.

The saloon at No. 80 Bedford Street had been tenanted for about five months. The last tenant was John Leonard.

Some interested in the case consider it important that the man who shot Knapp from behind should have left untouched not only the $60 in his pocket but the Geneva-made gold watch which was a present to him forty years ago from his father-in-law.

It has been suggested by some that Mrs. Chris may be mistaken as to the day on which she saw Mr. Knapp and a companion enter the saloon. In that event, they are led back to the theory that Knapp had been followed and that his assailant, knowing that a Myers man was on the way for the saloon mirrors, grabbed what he could see, the diamond pin, and fled.

BRYAN WILL NOT SPEAK IN "WET" JERSEY CITY

Is Said to Consider Hudson County of Small Importance Politically and Strategically.

William Jennings Bryan has refused to speak in Jersey City on the subject of prohibition. This decision was made public to-day on receipt of a telegram from an advocate of grape juice to Rev. Harry I. Everett, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Jersey City. Pastor Everett conducts a public forum every Friday evening within the homelike auditorium. Believing the prohibition element of Hudson County in general and Jersey City in particular would be enlightened after hearing the Nebraskan, he extended an invitation to Mr. Bryan to speak on Jan. 17.

But Mr. Bryan turned him down flat, thus: "Hudson County is of such small importance politically and strategically in its relation to the rest of the nation, may I not be excused?" Perhaps what Mr. Bryan states is true, but—Hudson County defeated Mr. Bryan for President in 1908 by 5,000 more votes to McKinley. The next time he ran, which was of course, the very next election, New Jersey elected McKinley by 56,000 plurality. Jersey politicians defeated Mr. Bryan in 1908 for President by 57,758 plurality.
